Andre Agassi's return to the Davis Cup team in 2005 was a triumphant moment for the American tennis legend. After a five-year absence from the team, Agassi returned to lead the United States to its first Davis Cup title in 12 years.

Agassi's return to the team was a surprise to many. He had retired from singles play in 2003, and had not played Davis Cup since 2000. However, Agassi was convinced by US captain Patrick McEnroe to return to the team for the 2005 Davis Cup semifinals against Russia.

Agassi's return to the team was a major boost for the United States. He won both of his singles matches in the semifinals, and then teamed with Andy Roddick to win the decisive doubles match in the final against Croatia.

Agassi's performance in the 2005 Davis Cup was a reminder of his greatness. He was still one of the best players in the world, and his experience and leadership were invaluable to the United States team.

The 2005 Davis Cup title was a special moment for Agassi. It was his first Davis Cup title, and it came at a time when he was nearing the end of his career. The title was a fitting tribute to Agassi's incredible career, and it cemented his legacy as one of the greatest tennis players of all time.
