The Judson Dance Theater

The Judson Dance Theater was founded in 1962 by a group of young dancers who were dissatisfied with the limitations of traditional ballet and modern dance. These dancers, including Yvonne Rainer, Steve Paxton, Trisha Brown, and Lucinda Childs, sought to create a new kind of dance that was more experimental, more democratic, and more reflective of the social and political changes of the time.

The Judson Dance Theater's performances were often characterized by their informality, their use of non-traditional spaces, and their focus on everyday movements. The dancers often improvised their performances, and they frequently invited audience members to participate.
