

The Army-Navy Game That Rallied a Nation at War

On December 29, 1944, the Army and Navy football teams met in Philadelphia for their annual rivalry game. The game was played in front of a sold-out crowd of over 100,000 people, and it was broadcast to millions more on the radio. The game was a close one, but in the end, Army won 23-21. The victory gave Army its first national championship in football, and it helped to rally the nation's spirits during World War II.

The Army-Navy game has been played every year since 1890, and it is one of the most storied rivalries in college football. The game is always played on the Saturday after Thanksgiving, and it is a major social event in both Philadelphia and Annapolis. The game is also a major fundraiser for both schools, and it has raised millions of dollars for scholarships and other programs.

The 1944 Army-Navy game was played during a time of great turmoil in the United States. The country was still in the midst of World War II, and the outcome of the war was still very much in doubt. The game was a welcome distraction from the war, and it helped to bring the country together. The game also served as a reminder of the importance of sportsmanship and competition, even during times of war.

The Army-Navy game is a tradition that has been passed down for generations. The game is a symbol of the rivalry between the two schools, but it is also a symbol of the unity of the country. The game is a reminder that even during the darkest of times, we can still come together to celebrate our shared love of sports.

The victory gave Army its first national championship in football, and it helped to rally the nation's spirits during World War II.

The game was played on a cold and rainy day in Philadelphia. The field was muddy, and the conditions were far from ideal. However, the two teams played a hard-fought game that was decided in the final minutes.

Army took the lead in the first quarter on a touchdown run by Doc Blanchard. Navy came back to tie the game in the second quarter on a touchdown pass from Tom Hamilton to Bill Busik. Army regained the lead in the third quarter on a touchdown pass from Arnold Tucker to Glenn Davis. Navy tied the game again in the fourth quarter on a touchdown run by Johnny Lujack.

The game was decided in the final minutes. Army drove the ball down the field and scored the winning touchdown on a pass from Tucker to Davis. The touchdown gave Army a 23-21 lead with just over two minutes remaining in the game.

Navy had a chance to tie the game on the final play of the game, but Lujack's pass was intercepted by Army's Bob Kelly. The interception sealed the victory for Army and gave them their first national championship in football.
