The Decline of the USMNT

The USMNT's decline began in the early 2010s. The team failed to qualify for the 2014 World Cup, and has struggled in recent friendlies and tournaments. There are a number of factors that have contributed to the team's struggles, including:

- A lack of development: The USMNT has not developed enough young players in recent years. The team has relied too heavily on a few aging stars, and has not been able to replace them with younger, more talented players.
- A lack of coaching: The USMNT has had a number of coaching changes in recent years, and the team has not been able to find a stable, long-term coach. This has led to a lack of continuity and a lack of a clear playing style.
- A lack of competition: The USMNT does not play enough competitive matches against top-tier opponents. The team's schedule is often filled with friendlies against weaker teams, and this has led to a lack of experience and a lack of confidence.

Rebuilding the USMNT

The USMNT needs to rebuild if it wants to restore its former glory. The team needs to develop more young players, find a stable, long-term coach, and schedule more competitive matches against top-tier opponents.

The USMNT has a lot of potential, but the team needs to make some changes if it wants to rebuild. This book offers solutions for how to rebuild the program and restore the USMNT to its former glory.
